CAMPAIGN REPORT 2010

Humane Society International Inc. | PO Box 439 Avalon NSW 2107 Australia | Ph + 61 2 9973 1728 | www.hsi.org.au

IN A YEAR that has dragged us through the horrors of a Federal election, the workload never diminishes as our environmental problems increase, and politicians continue to let us down. This has also been the United Nations International Year of Biodiversity, reminding us of the pressures confronting all animals and their natural world. HSI faces these challenges with the confidence and backing of our 40,000 supporters, increasingly relying on our own initiatives, and not on government action.

Domestically, it has been a very tough year, fighting rural industries that want to avoid effective standards and scrutiny of their treatment of farm animals, but we have made significant inroads. On the wildlife and habitat protection front, we have again ensured the legal protection for well over a million acres of threatened ecosystems, and also gained some policy traction on habitat protection through potential "green carbon" programs. HSI's Wildlife Land Trust now has well over 80 member sanctuaries across the six states, while our marine program has stepped up efforts to protect the critical habitats of whales, dolphins, dugongs, sea lions, sharks and turtles.

Most notable on the global front this year, we have seen our colleagues at Wildlife SOS rescue the final "dancing" (sloth) bears from their miserable lives on the streets of India, a success for which all HSI supporters deserve enormous credit. We have maintained a range of other international programs to help protect animals in need, while our global disaster relief program has been stretched to the limit to not only deal with the range of catastrophic events around the globe but also helping the working animals of war-torn Afghanistan.

These many challenges will of course continue into 2011, not the least of which will be our participation in the international talks on climate change, whales and tropical forests. We thank our supporters for all their help through 2010, and can assure you that we will be fighting just as hard for the animals and their environments in 2011.

WHALES AND WHALING

HSI WAS PART OF A TEAM that successfully avoided a catastrophe at this year's International Whaling Commission meeting in Morocco, by defeating a compromise proposal that would have suspended the global moratorium on commercial whaling and permitted coastal whaling. HSI fully supported the Australian Government's bid in launching a legal action at the International Court of Justice in the Hague, to close the scientific whaling loophole used by Japan to kill whales in Australia's Antarctic Whale Sanctuary – a case HSI first proposed over a decade ago. Our legal injunction against the Japanese whalers still stands, and if they dare enter Australian waters, we will take further legal action.

PROTECTING OUR MARINE ENVIRONMENT

PROTECTING OUR precious marine world remains a high priority for HSI. A notable success this year was the legislative protection of the 1.7 million acre Ningaloo Reef and Coast for the National Heritage List – which also triggered an Australian Government nomination of Ningaloo for the World Heritage List. With project partners, we recently identified over 260 separate marine critical habitat areas for 14 species of whales, dolphins, sharks and turtles - and the Australian sea lion and dugong - urging the Australian Government to list them all under national environment law. HSI also continues to battle, successfully, for the protection of Australian sea lion, albatrosses, and the southern bluefin tuna.

PROTECTING FLYING FOXES

© Nick Edards

IT HAS NOT been a good year for much maligned grey-headed flying foxes, with floods decimating their food sources, habitats being destroyed, and cruel shooting deaths by fruit farmers, with research showing that many animals are now underweight and in bad condition. After initially gaining them national and legal recognition as a threatened species, HSI has been fighting hard for their protection and recovery. It has been such a frustrating process that we are once again financially supporting a Federal court case to stop their eviction from a critical habitat in Sydney. We have now been involved in over six court cases to help protect these marvellous animals.

WILDLIFE LAND TRUST

HSI'S WILDLIFE LAND TRUST, consisting of private landholders committed to the conservation of Australian wildlife and habitats, has been continually expanding across the country. There are now over 80 private sanctuaries in this national and international network of like-minded people, covering some 35,000 acres through six states. From a northern Queensland rainforest to a small island off Tasmania's south-east coast, and from a World Heritage area to a block of land in rehabilitation, the network is a broad church of conservation effort, bringing together people that really care. The WLT also has 12 sanctuary members spread through India, Africa and Indonesia covering some 25,000 acres and protecting a wide range of threatened animals.

DISASTER RELIEF

IN WAR ZONES and when disaster strikes it's easy to forget the animals. The face of war is undoubtedly human suffering, but behind the scenes hundreds of thousands of animals are killed, starving or abandoned. In 1995 there were around 50 natural disasters globally, but by 2008 the tally had reached 450, and we haven't counted the wars. HSI Disaster Relief Teams help with animal rescue efforts around the world and work in post disaster regions to ensure that animal welfare issues are considered when rebuilding begins. The Australian office focus this year has been on Afghanistan, collaborating with the Society for the Protection of Animals Abroad (SPAN), to help deliver projects to improve the lives of animals in war ravaged areas and consequently their beleaguered owners.

PRIMATE REHABILITATION

THIS YEAR SAW the finalisation of two successful projects to rescue and rehabilitate troops of vervet monkeys in Zambia and South Africa. In Zambia, working with the Born Free Foundation, we responded to an emergency call when the President of Zambia had threatened to kill a large troop of vervet monkeys in his Statehouse grounds. The Lunga Luswishi Wildlife Project quickly moved to rescue and release back into the wild 64 vervet monkeys, overall saving 200 plus animals from certain execution. At SanWild Wildlife Sanctuary in South Africa, we also supported a successful rehabilitation and release program for vervets, establishing an effective "protocol" for future programs of this kind.

HUMANE CHOICE – TRUE FREE RANGE

WORKING WITH the Free Range Pig Farmers Association, HSI has had an extremely intense year battling to establish a national “free range” standard for pigs. The standard should be introduced before the end of the year and has immensely positive implications for the welfare of pigs on production farms across Australia, for the health of humans and for the health of the environment. The number of Australian farmers that have joined HSI’s Humane Choice - True Free Range label is steadily increasing, and it will not be long now before you will be able to find Humane Choice endorsed pork, chicken and egg products in the shops.

AN END TO BEAR CRUELTY

IT WAS TRULY WONDERFUL news that Wildlife SOS in India had achieved its ultimate goal of rescuing all the 'dancing bears' from the streets of India by the start of 2010. Bringing an end to this cruel and painful practice has taken a mammoth effort on the part of this amazing organisation and we are very proud to have been part of the solution, and very thankful to all of HSI's supporters for their generosity. Kartick and Geeta, the directors of Wildlife SOS, also thank all of you who contributed to the final dance, giving the bears new lives, free from pain and suffering.

PROTECTING INDIAN ELEPHANTS

WHILE HSI CONTINUES to pursue the conservation of elephants in Africa and Indonesia, we have been particularly pleased to help with the protection of abused Asian elephants in India. We have been supporting the broad Captive Elephant Welfare & Conservation Project of Wildlife SOS in India, which has been rescuing and caring for large numbers of New Delhi's working elephants, and helping stop illegal trade. This work has included the very high profile rescue of Champa, from a life of misery as a beast for entertainment, to a place free of pain and suffering and treated with respect and kindness – a successful rescue operation thanks to HSI's supporters.

HABITAT PROTECTION AND CLIMATE CHANGE

OUR CLIMATE CHANGE activities have focused on the protection of wildlife habitats across the country, keeping carbon in the ground, and gaining legislative protection for another million or so acres. We have now protected well over 5 million acres of threatened habitats through legal means, and achieved further legal protection for millions more acres under national heritage laws. This work has been complemented through our successful promotion of “green carbon” policies in Australia. Internationally, we continue to fight for tropical rainforest protection through the Kyoto climate change negotiations, and have funded critical climate research through the United Nations to pinpoint global biodiversity and carbon hotspots that need protection.

SEA LIONS AND COMMERCIAL FISHING

DESPITE STATE and Commonwealth legislative protection, an Australian shark fishery is seriously impacting upon the future of the threatened Australian sea lion, as hundreds of these animals are killed each year, drowning in nets as 'bycatch'. In out of court negotiations with the Commonwealth, following HSI litigation, strict conditions to reduce the bycatch were imposed, which the Federal Minister is now required to enforce. This is best achieved through closing areas of the fishery where female sea lions are most impacted. HSI will consider taking further action in the courts if the Minister fails to act.
